

In article <C50z77.EE6@news.cso.uiuc.edu>, jelson@rcnext.cso.uiuc.edu (John Elson) writes:

>Has anyone ever heard of a food product called "Space Food Sticks?" This >was apparently created/marketed around the time of the lunar expeditions, along >with "Tang" and other dehydrated foods. I have spoken with several people >who have eaten these before, and they described them as a dehydrated candy.
>Any information would be greatly appreciated.

A freeze dried Tootsie Roll (tm). The actual taste sensation was like nothing you will ever willingly experience. The amazing thing was that we ate a second one, and a third and

I doubt that they actually flew on missions, as I'm certain they did "bad things" to the gastrointestinal tract. Compared to Space Food Sticks, Tang was a gastronomic contribution to mankind.

Dillon Pyron | The opinions expressed are those of the

TI/DSEG Lewisville VAX Support | sender unless otherwise stated.

(214)462-3556 (when I'm here) |

(214)492-4656 (when I'm home) |God gave us weather so we wouldn't complain

pyron@skndiv.dseg.ti.com |about other things.

PS. I don't think Tang flew, either. Although it was developed under contract.